Question:

Why is the church slow to embrace the move of God in the marketplace?

Answer:

The church actually has a tremendous opportunity to embrace this workplace movement. If they do, they will realize that thousands of people can be ambassadors, can be ministers, coming out of a church setting, equipped and able to help their coworkers, help those who are interfacing with them every day.

Why is the church slow to embrace this? They tend to be focused inward, instead of being focused outward—but that's beginning to change, and as it does, I suspect that we're going to see a rapid expansion in the extension of Christianity into everybody's daily work.
